Neville the Marker, King of the Saxons and of the Normans

Trade Value: 9.2 Partners: Andalus, Thaery*, Francia, Polska-

DIPLOMACY: Brittany(ea), Ile de France(n), Vermandois(n)

With international co-operation and support, King Neville began the process of grinding down the Guyenne Rebellion. He had sought to untie all the spies of Europe into one big, close family. He found though that the spies of various nationalities don't get along that well. Thus his ambitious plan to subvert the Vermandois was botched. The vermandois remained loyal, at least for the time being. The slow moving armies of Saxonia began to march. The 20,000 man strong Galacians lumbered into Asturias and pacified the region when Sedgewick landed on the shore with 18,000 more pawn. Leo the Magnificent and Count Renart of Blois took their time going through Vermandois and Lorraine looking for Count Jean of Ardennes. He was discovered in Champagne and he had recently been defeated by Francian forces [See Guyenne entry below]. The 41,500 soldier army spooked the demoralized Vermandois ally who had only 18,500 men left. He agreed to go neutral if they left him and his loyalists unmolested. Leo and Renart forced tribute from Orleans and that was all the move they could do up to December 1215. Ile de France was neutralized by the Anjou, who in the interim, had to chase away a Guyenne garrison from their own territory. The Poitou Earl refused to leave his army behind in order to coordinate naval activities. So the Poitou stayed home and didn't fight at all.

THE KINGDOM OF GUYENNE

Clovis Seven-Fingers, Count of Perigord, Dux Aquitanium, Roy de Guyenne

Trade Value: 4.3 Partners: Mahidia-, Milano, Liguria, Byzantine*

DIPLOMACY: none

Lothair's able son Clovis was the subject of many different assassination attempts, including one from Andalusia. The most successful of these was Saxonian who chopped off two of his fingers and a thumb from his left hand. The Crown Prince henceforth was called Seven-Fingers Clovis. The Septidigit Man tried to dislodge the Francians from Provence with 25,000 infantry and 5500 siege workers. The Francians were well prepared with the recent arrival of Tibo auf Carinthian who force marched his cavalry patrol from the Tyrollian Alps to Provence. He quickly organized the defense of 7000 heavy lancers, 17,000 cavalry including 3500 exhausted Carinthians, 8500 fully armored shield men, 10 000 pole men and 2500 logistics and supply specialists. They destroyed Clovis' army. Clovis escaped capture and was next seen in Toulouse, touching bases with the local burghmaster. Count Jean of Vermandois and his army who had kept the northern marches intact was visited by many urging him to quit his alliance with Lothair the Traitor and rejoin Saxonia. He blew them off and didn't take serious consideration of these suggestions until he was defeated by a coalition of Francian allies who skillfully defended Burgundy with 11,000 infantry, 4000 cavalry and 25 castles. Jean's forces once 25,500 men strong was reduced to 16,500 and was subjected to pure intimidation by two Saxonians corps. His withdrawal of support meant that Champagne was restored to Francia as a tribute paying country. This action compounded by the neutralization of Ile de France and the failure to control Anjou, grossly isolated Lorraine. It was a good thing for the sake of compactness that Francia conquered it late in 1215. The Asturians who was expected to help relieve the coastal front was caught by the Galacians and were destroyed. All these losses reduced Guyenne territory to Catalonia, Armagnac, Aquitaine, Auvergne and Lyonnais. During this whole time, the Papacy had been strangely quiet.

THE ALMORAVID EMIRATE OF ANDALUSIA

Istafa II, Emir as Sevilla

Trade Value: 12.8 Partners: Gaota*, Mahdia, Saxon, Liguria-, Pope-, Byzantion*

DIPLOMACY: Malta(f), Saragoza(t), Bojador(ea)

A scandal broke early in 1211 when the Emir's own interventionist policy in regards to the Christian Wars was shown to be a farce when his own assassins were exposed in Aquitaine. Immediately Istafa responded by jailing those responsible for this policy to allay the complainers. In the following year all the key whiners were murdered. Silently the architects of the Guyenne heir assassination plan were freed because these were then most trusted retainers of the Emir's governing body. In Malta, Al Kiffa was constructed, a walled port obviously.

It was fortunate then that Augusto was in Arezzo when Leon died. It gave Jacapo a chance to play his lineage card to gain the loyalty of the palace staff. Jacapo was quick and he gained control of Abruzzo, Tronto, Fucina, Matese, Molise, Aterno and the services of Carlo Lemac. It was clear Tyran was got to protect his frontier and the expeditionary army in Languedoc before they be embroiled or ravaged by the forges of conflict. The newly established Carinthian Corp raced to Languedoc to help Nikto Blum defend this isolated outpost from all corners. Crown Prince Ekhart hurried to Meissen so he can command the Polish army. They were later stationed in Nordgau. Meanwhile a Guyenne army did cross into Francon land forcing tribute from Champagne. They came to a showdown with the Francian allies in Burgundy.
